Core Value: Excellent Teamwork
Energy and Sustainability - Michael Nord

Typically this section of the newsletter is geared towards taking action for sustainable measures, in which I highly encourage nonetheless. This month is a bit different. I wanted to take a moment to share the action we have taken and some of the results.

As part of the new steam plant endeavor the University is addressing the need for reducing deferred maintenance and energy consumption across many of the academic and academic support buildings. These projects are well underway and once completed will have a tremendous impact on energy consumption and our impact on the environment all while adding new life to many of the buildings.

Of all the projects, the lighting upgrades are perhaps the farthest along, at 35% complete today and is expect to be 76% complete by the fall semester. The Upson I is the first UND building to have a connected lighting system, allowing the building to be impressively smart. Who would have thought we would be able to turn the lights on/off all the way from Upson I while setting in facilities.

The connected lighting system gives us feedback such as lighting related energy usage. Additional feedback such as the occupancy of the building, which will allow us to connect to other building automation systems in the future.

In addition to the start of the energy reductions at Upson I, we are also seeing the reductions at other building as well. Chester Fritz Auditorium 20.8%, Gillette 12.6%, Hughes 29.9%, and Facilities 24.2%. Although the data is just starting to come in the disruption is beginning to show results, and it would not be possible without the efforts of everyone within facilities. And as always you encouraged you to make suggestions of possible opportunities to your supervisor or contact Michael at 72333 or email to Michael.k.nord@und.edu.
